to make up 4 sets of sounds within a mix of known words and new words.

In Pelmanism, all the cards are spread over the table face down. Players take it in turns to find pairs. In this case, players are looking to find pairs of corresponding sounds. (Sometimes as well the spelling may also correspond). Player A first turns one card, then chooses another card to turn over. If a match is made, Player A takes another go. If a match is not made, the player turns the cards back over, leaving them in the same place and play passes to Player B. Players have to try to remember the location of the cards to help them find further pairs.

2 sets of cards can be used to practise two SSCs, or build up the difficulty by using 3 sets together or even 4 sets together. Using 4 sets would potentially be better done as group rather than pair work due to table space needed.
